DO NOT GO AROUND THIS WORLD AS AN EVIL SCANDAL MONGER.

Rev. R. P. Williams Gave to the Congregation of Grace Episcopal Church Excellent Suggestions About Thinking.

The wrath of Heaven is upon those who talk scandal, and the reward of the scandal-monger is that of the unrighteous.

Put a bridle upon thy tongue, and consider well thy words, ye people who talk about the failings of your fellow men. Rev. R. P. Williams, the assistant rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church, occupted the pulpit of Grace church Sunday morning, Rev. L. R. Mason, the rector, having to officiate at St. Paul's in place of the Rev. Mr. Carmichael. There was a large congregation at Grace church, and the sermon, which created a great deal of comment, was splindidly great deal of comment, was splind'dly delivered by Mr. Williams.

The gist of the sermon was as follows:
Psalm exl. 3. "They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent; adders' poison is under their lips."

The man who wrote these words possessel a therough knowledge of human nature. It was not a knowledge acquired from books, but from long experience among his own people. What he says is not the result of theories, but of the plain unvarnished facts, learned during a busy life. A life which none of us need wish to live; experiences which none of us need envy. In adversity and jin prosperity to live; experiences which none of us need eavy. In adversity and in prosperity alike he had found that one great enemy of man is the tongue. Whether he were in the wilderness or in the palace, that was one foe he could not escape. Does the Edomite, Ahitophel the counsellor, Absalom the son, Shimei the Henjamite, might all have inspired the bitter words of the Pisalmist. They were no mere tirades, but the outbursts of a suffering soul.

The abuse of the tongue attracts our condemnation even more strongly than it did flavid's. And yet what fault is more often committed? What sin is easier to fall into? The homicide must either deliberate before he takes human life. life or he must be aroused to the highest pitch of uncontrollable anser before he commits the fatal act. The man who violates the sanctity of a home must average man, if he is honest, will The average man, if he is honest, will confess that on ordinary occasions he does not carefully weigh the meaning and effect of his speech. You meet a friend on the street and pass a few moments in casual conversation with him.

How much impression is made on your own mind by what you say to him? There is only one chance in a hundred that you can recall a word you said unless you are reminded of it by your listener or by some one to whom he has tener or by some one to whom he has repeated it.

Is it not a fact that we are often accused of having made remarks of which we have not the slightest recollection and which we hastily disclaim when our attention is called to them? Do we not recognize many concern tack of deliberaattention is called to them? Do we not recognize man's general lack of deliberation when we excuse the hasty word of a friend and say: "He did not mean what he said; he was not thinking?"

How much of the troubles of life can he traced to this thoughtlessness? How many friendships have suffered ship-wreck from the effects of a careless speech, forgotten as soon as uttered? How many mistakes have been made in business, in law, in medicine, by the of nice discrimination in verbal di-course, which has affected our whole life, misled by a remark which meant nothing to the speaker, but which was fraught with direst results to the hearer? What tremendous conflicts have threatened the very life of the Church, initiated by an apparently innocent theological state-

Many people are never so happy as when they are listening to the sound of their own voices.

their own voices.

"They always talk who never think."
The man who is always ready to take the lead in conversation is generally the one who has the least capital to carry on the business with. He is like a scantstocked shop with all the goods in the show-windows.

He forgets that the shallow rivulet, on whose troubled waters one can scarcely float a chip, makes more noise than the mighty river with its fleets from every Sensible people are not influenced by such talkers, but, nevertheless, they do find an audience, and the very fact that they do not intentionally make mischief, is frequently the cause of more damage than would result from the efforts of one than would result from the efforts of one who meant to do wrong. The admitted absence of motive lends more semblance of truth to what they say; and a slur upon one's character from such a source has with many more force than it would have coming from a person who was known to be unfriendly. And yet the one might be true and the other baseless.

But if the effects of the careless and irresponsible use of the gift of speech are serious, what must be expected when evil motives are at work? And, remember, these motives need not necessarily be such as arise from iil-will. Most of us would prefer the open accusation of an enemy to the flippant sneer of one who merely wished to make his conversation amusing and piquant.

There are many varieties of unwholesome talk between the thoughtless chat and the virulent attack. All of us have suffered from the professed friend who relates some occurrence in which we have perhaps been involved and in which we perhaps been involved and in which we have not shone with particular brilliancy. We can always trust our friend to embel-lish his account of it with touches cal-culated to exaggerate the mistakes we have made and to expose our foibles, especially when by doing so he will gain a reputation for being a fine raconteur and win fame as a wit.

and win fame as a wit.

Such men trade on the natural pleasure so many feel at the misfortunes of others, and rather than allow a good story to fall flat he will invent additional situations to tickle the humor of his audience. A man like that will recoil with horror from an accuration of unfriendings. from an accusation of unfriendliness. He sees no harm in having a good laugh at our expense, and thinks us ill-natured if we do not join as heartily in the mirth he has evoked as others do. How fer-vently we can say in such a case:

"Give me the avowed, the erect, the manly foe.

Bold I can meet-perhaps may turn his But of all plagues, good Heaven, thy wrath can send,

Save, save, oh save me from the candid friend."

Is it not a shame that there can be on this earth, breathing the air with us, a number of creatures made in the linage and likeness of God, who will deliberately undertake to stander their fellows?

Here are the men and women who, it seems to me, might be justly numbered among the murderers and thieves. The heinousness of their sin consists in its heinousness of their sin consists in its premeditation. They cannot take shelter behind a plea of thoughtlessness. One does not without some purpose blacken his neighbor's character by disseminating deceitful tales about him. It requires invention and method to injure a person in trat way. There is an element of malice combined with the falsity of the stories. Why, even as far back as when the israelites were at Sinai, we find such a law as lites were at Sinal, we find such a law as this: "Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people."

There is sometiding no perfectly des-pleable in the tale-bearer and handerer that it is no wonder we find the most vigorous denunciations of them through out not only sacred but also secular lieraure. The victim of this sort of attack ever knows his danger till the serpent into the open. He not only exposes what are really your faults, but he lies about you into the bargain. He not only vilines your actions, but questions your motives under all circumstances. He not only

"Twas slander filled her mouth with Slander, the foulest whelp of sin.

It is a far-reaching sin. "The standerer does harm to three persons at once; to him of whom he says the ill, to him to whom he says it, and, most of ail, to himself in saying it."

And we may go still farther. It does not stop with the person to whom it is told. Consciously or unconsciously, the latter becomes a vehicle for the spread of the nauseous venom, till the victim's whole neighborhood is poisoned by the infection. He finds himself shunned by his old associates, who will not meet him his old associates, who will not meet and nor tell him why they hold themselves aloof. The criminal who has inaugurated the libel is lost in the multitude of those who are circulating it. If the mine finalwho are circulating it. It can be and by explodes he is at a safe distance, and the only sufferers are his willing or unwilling accomplices.

It is so much more effective to gain your ends by blackening the character of your adversary than by disproving his arguments. It is so much easier to ruin him, by discrediting his motives than by analyzing his logic. Is not that the method which has always been adopted town, a those who differ from others in matters of faith? The reasoning which leads up to such a course is very simple and understood by every one. "My oppo-nent's theology is false; therefore his morals must be bad." You need no stronger argument than that to appeal to the passions of men, and how successfully the appeal has been made the history of the Church will plainly disclose to any one who chooses to wade through the mazes of its heredes. The Romanist anathematizes the Protestant and the Greek. The Lutheran and the Zwinglian mutually excommunicate each other. So bitter do these controversies and per sonal attacks become that sometimes it would seem that only the absence of the power prevents those who call themselves orthodox from burning the bodies of those whose reasons they cannot

It were perhaps well if the mischief ended there. But alas, if it be true that "death loves a shining mark," no less is it true that the higher the victim, the more venomous the attack. Is there one piece of scandal in the whole world more delicious to its purveyors than the tale about the minister?

There is a set of people in some churches whose sole occupation seems to be to find fault with those who happen to be placed for the time being in spiritual authority. Not that these good people always direct their misguided activity against their own pastor. Not at all.
They are far more apt to attack the parson of some other congregation than their ewn.

their ewn.

If their pastor happens to be more popular than some one clse's, they will enjoy nothing so much as to draw comparisons for the benefit of their less fortunate neighbors, whose minister may not sline so well. These, on the other hand, not to be outdone, unable to minimise the ability of their friend's rector, fall back on innuendoes as to his private life, and endcayor to undermine his influence by discrediting his uprightness and virtue.

discrediting his uprightness and virtue.

How frequently is the honesty and integrity of a man disposed of by a smile or a shrug. How many good and generous actions have been sunk into oblivion by a distrustful look or stamped with the imputation of proceeding from bad motives by a mysterious and seasonable whisper.

There is one remedy, brethren, for the treatment of the torque. "Give not thy tongue too great a liberty, lest it take the prisoner. A word unspoken is like the sword in the scabbard, thine: if vented, thy sword is in another's hand. If thou desire to be held wise, be so wise as to hold thy tongue." The man or woman who cannot do that by sheer force of will, aided by prayer, has too little to do. Any one who has idle time at his disposal is apt to fall into the habit of loose talk. Most people have not a sufficient amount of knowledge available to occupy their thoughts when their bodies are unemployed. Many are thus at the mercy of temptation, and are insensibly led to indulge in foolish and gossiping conversation with anybody who happens along. The step is but a short one from harmless tittle-tattle to death-dealing stander. The once idle man or woman There is one remedy, brethren, for the harmless tittle-tattle to death-dealing siander. The once idle man or woman becomes transformed into a bustling busy body, actively engaged in killing reputations.

A gentleman in Virginia who is in hearty sympathy with the ladies who have so readily come to the front to make the Bazaar a success, has written a let-ter, wherein he expresses the following sentiments:

if it is only an egg. Then gather the odds and ends together and ship in bulk. My object will be to work in a circle around my shipping point and interest in it as many as I can.

There is one thing I don't like about it. It is all right for the soldiers and sailors to have this monument, but I want the mother, the wife and the daughter of the Confederacy to be represented also. The highest order of heroism displayed during our war was that displayed by our women, and until our people do acthowledge it in some appropriate way the tribute to worth and virtue will not be complete. Can't we start it in some way? My own idea is to place a figure of the Confederate woman upon the same pedestal with the soldier and sailor.

A Big Show.

In placing the "Country Circus" on the stage its projectors, Messrs, Charles Jefferson, Klaw & Erianger have, from all accounts, made a most radical de-parture from the old time-honored theaparture from the old time-honored thea-trical custams, and equipped it with a boldness and brilliancy that seems the very incarnation of business dash. The glamour of the tented field, says a cor-respondent, which is thrown around the performance, catches the audience at the beginning, and each bit of natural-ness seems to strike a hearty and re-sponsive chord. The performance is given with a swing and ease that can only be gained by experience, and a thoroughly enjoyable entertainment is ous departments of the bazaar will be held in the same place on Wednesday at 11 A. A SUNNY NATURE,

LOYELY WOMAN'S BEST AND GREAT-EST CHARM.

What a Bright and Attractive Woman

Has to Say to Her Sisters. How a Happy and Joyous Nature Canba Acquired.

Women make the sunshine of life. Did you ever watch the flowers turn with irresistible persistence toward the sunshirt So does the bright, joyous, sunny nature of a woman irrisistibly attract all to her light-hearted, merry and buoyant Such a nature makes glad the heart; it

For a man, all the anxiety of business, the weight of care, the gloom and depression of spirits are dispersed as clouds by the sun before the bright smile of a joyous, happy wife.

And it follows no less surely that a cross woman, one never pleased, always fault-finding, discontented and unhappy, will repel all who approach her, and make those who should love her shrink from

Now, the first requisite of good nature is good health. No one out of health can have bounding spirits and feel particularly good-natured. If a woman feels nervous, weak, tired, languid, lifeless and miserable, experi-ences a faintness, sense of fulness after eating, has irregular apperlie, consti-pated bowels, frequent headaches, wake-ful or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, weak back, backache, dragging down pains, irregularities, female weakness, any or all of these, it is impossible for her to be light-hearted and happy.

be light-hearted and happy.

And in the spring these feelings are very prevalent because of the torpid condition of the system after the winter. She must be cured first, and, with returning health, her old-time spirits will come back.

If women will follow closely the advice and example of our bright and attractive correspondent, Mrs. Elmer Craig, of Le Roy, Ill., they can easily attain both health and good spirits.

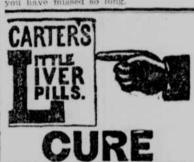

MRS. ELMER CRAIG.

"I was stricken with nervous disease," writes Mrs. Craig, "which affected my heart, head and stomach, I dectored with heart, head and stomach. I dectored with physicians of our town, but got no reliefrom the terrible sick headaches, pains i the heart and stomach, until I used D Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remeds Before I used this wonderful medicine the nerves in my eyes were so affected that I feared that I would lose my sight. would get so nervous and weak I could not walk across the room without terrible palpitation of the heart. I had not taken one bottle of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy before my head and eyes were cleared of their dull aching.

eyes were cleared of their dull aching, and I am growing stronger every day. I cannot 50 half justice in the praise of this medicine."

This wonderful remedy is the greatest boon to women ever discovered, and by its use you can be restored to sound, vigorous and healthy womanhood. By all means use it now, in the spring, for everybody needs a spring medicine at this season of the year. This is the best of all spring medicines and is recommended as such by the doctors to invigorate the blood. by the doctors to invigorate the blood, The body was sent to the almshouse for by the doctors to invigorate the blood, and the strengthen the neves and start up the natural action of all the organs.
